

BBH Select Series - Large Cap Fund

Quarterly Fund Update / 1Q 2023

1Q Highlights

- The Fund posted solid gains for the period led by strong absolute contributions from Information Technology, Industrial, and Consumer Discretionary sectors, as well as strong relative performance from Health Care.
- Following an extraordinary course of events, Signature Bank ("SBNY" or "Signature") was seized by the New York Department of Financial Services and the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation (FDIC) on March 12th.
- The current environment illustrates the challenge central banks face between maintaining financial stability and containing inflation.

Market Overview

Despite the emergence of a regional bank crisis in early March, the S&P 500 added a second consecutive strong quarter following the October 2022 lows. Moderating inflation, a resilient consumer, declining interest rates, a stable Dollar, and the reversal of China's Zero-COVID policy provided a constructive backdrop, albeit with some volatility, and a leadership rotation which resulted in a wide dispersion of returns across sectors and asset classes. It is clear financial markets are anticipating the end of the Federal Reserve's tightening cycle, which has historically been positive for equity investors.

Portfolio Commentary

The BBH Select Series – Large Cap Fund ("the Fund") gained 5.70% for the first quarter, compared to 7.50% for the benchmark S&P 500. Underperformance for the period was largely attributed to our investment in Signature Bank, which was seized by regulators in early March. Despite the SBNY loss, the Fund posted solid gains for the period led by strong absolute contributions from the Fund's Information Technology, Industrial, and Consumer Discretionary sectors, as well as strong relative performance from its Health Care holdings. Top contributors for the period included Alphabet (GOOG), Booking Holdings (BKNG), and Microsoft (MSFT). Primary detractors were Signature, Dollar General (DG) and Abbott Laboratories (ABT). At quarter end, the Fund held 28 positions, 48% in the top 10, 2% in cash, and traded at 82% of our estimate of intrinsic value.¹

Following an extraordinary course of events, Signature Bank was seized by the New York Department of Financial Services and the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation (FDIC) on March 12th. The proximate cause of this action was the failure of Silicon Valley Bank on March 10th and the initial decision of regulators not to stand behind SVB's uninsured depositors, which caused a run on several banks, including Signature. Signature funded its balance sheet primarily from corporate deposits, so nearly all its deposits were above the FDIC insured limit, as they had been since the bank's founding. In prior periods of acute stress, including the Global Financial Crisis (GFC) and COVID-19 pandemic, Signature had continued to attract net deposit inflows, but that was not the case in this instance. With stable deposits up to Thursday March 9th, withdrawal requests were substantial on March 10th. While we believe the company had sufficient liquidity and borrowing capacity to meet these demands, the regulators elected to seize the bank on Sunday, March 12th.

Our decision to invest in Signature was motivated by the bank's exceptional performance over its 20-year history and the substantial value we believed its shares represented. Signature consistently and responsibly grew the key components of value – deposits, earning assets, tangible book value, and earnings – well above industry averages. Credit quality at the bank was consistently superior, even under the most severe conditions. For example, Signature was profitable during every quarter of the GFC and its net charge-offs were a fraction of its peers. Seeing the company perform during challenging periods and how the company was positioned for the current environment, we believed the bank had the capital base, asset quality, liquidity, and borrowing capacity to not only endure, but to thrive. Our long history of following the bank and having regular communications with management reinforced this belief. The company's deposit-only services for participants in the crypto-currency ecosystem was never well understood by the market and caused shares to come under significant pressure beginning in January 2022; our initial investment in SBNY was in March 2022. Given the company had no credit exposure to crypto and did not hold, trade, custody, or lend against crypto, we believed the market's misperception created an opportunity to own what was, by all measures, a leading bank franchise at an exceptionally compelling valuation.

There is an innate vulnerability among banks to a sudden loss of depositor confidence. We were aware of this risk but given that bank runs are almost always precipitated by a credit crisis, which doesn't exist today, and the strength of the company's balance sheet, we judged that risk to be low. However, the nature of banking has changed markedly in the last 10 years and the widespread adoption of digital banking has made deposits dramatically easier to move, especially when combined with social media's ability to induce fear and panic – necessary conditions for a bank run – more easily and rapidly transmissible. Both forces worked against Signature in rapid succession and caused an otherwise strong institution with an excellent record and reputation to fail. It was clearly a very disappointing outcome for our investors and our team who hold capital preservation as a primary objective.

At the other end of the spectrum, Booking Holdings was the Fund's top performer for the period. Strong fundamental results from this collection of leading online travel agencies were driven by resilient demand and improving market sentiment regarding travel. During its fourth quarter call hosted in late February, management shared a compelling outlook with key operating metrics returning to, and in some cases, exceeding pre-pandemic levels. Comments on the call pointed to a stronger than anticipated revenue outlook for 2023, better visibility, and a mix shift toward higher margin business segments which will further support expected earnings growth and profitability. Beyond recent results, we continue to view Booking not only as a beneficiary of the consumer's growing preference for experiences, but as a long-term beneficiary of the shift from offline to online booking modalities and a share gainer in the industry.

Outlook

The current environment illustrates the challenge central banks face between maintaining financial stability and containing inflation. As economic activity slows and earnings expectations moderate, investors have thus far elected to look through the prospect of an earnings recession, the probability of which has increased with the recent banking sector turmoil and the inevitable tightening of credit. While we are encouraged to see equities recover, we recognize it has been a challenging environment characterized by heightened uncertainty and periods of volatility. As ever, our focus remains on businesses characterized by durable cash flows and earnings growth, healthy balance sheets, and attractive valuations. From this perspective, we continue to own and find value in businesses we believe will continue to compound at attractive rates over time.

Respectfully,

Nicholas Haffenreffer
